

REVIEW OF PAGHAM LAGOONS WALK TUESDAY 10THJ OCTOBER 2017.

Tom Little with help from Tommy Little aged 9.

Somewhat of a cold wind blew across Pagham as a party of 18 braved the elements as they walked towards the lagoons. Past an interesting variety of bungalows including old railway carriages until a stretch of shingle was reached beside the original Pagham Harbour lagoon. The party stumbled through the shingle with thighs shaking and aching until the viewing platform was reached seawards with the tide racing through the harbour entrance with sight of the other lagoon.

The path became better as the party skirted the holiday park, with some brave souls walking the plank with no fear, no rum , no cutlasses and alas no pirates.

St.Thomas A' Becket Church was reached on the site of a previous Saxon Church, another chance to discuss the ubiquitous St.Wilfrid.

The walk finished off down Sea lane where the scary statues of Easter Island were noticed amongst the palm trees.

The walk finished on time opposite the café with some members repairing there for a suitable drink.
