

Dangerous Corner (formerly known as “A major influence in my life”)

On Saturday 28th April, the Theatre Group, went to see a Matinee performance of Dangerous Corner, at the Dixon Theatre. It was written by J. B. Priestley.

The Play was set in the 1930s, it revolves around a Group of people who work together. They are staying at Robert and Freda Caplan’s Country Retreat.

Sparks start to fly, when they discuss Martin’s suicide. He was Robert’s brother. Also the theft of a cheque from the Office. Suddenly, accusations are made, and revelations come to light, It seems, that there had been romantic connections between members of the Group, this results in an intriguing situation, with an unexpected ending.

The Play was well crafted, by the Writer, and brilliantly acted by the Southend Shakespeare Company. This made for a very enjoyable and thought provoking afternoon.

Afterwards, some members of the Theatre Group went out to dinner at the Italian Restaurant across the road.
